BIOGRAPHY

Intan Farhana is a Master of Commerce (Accounting) graduate from Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand. Her curiosity in different accounting conceptions has driven her to explore qualitative aspects of accounting in her research experience. She views accounting and accountability as value-based activities which encompass social, moral, spiritual and material aspects. This led her research interests into management accounting, governmental accounting, and critical accounting. After completing her Master's studies, she started her journey as academia by taking a role as a Research Assistant at the School of Accounting and Commercial Law, Victoria University of Wellington. She was involved in the data analysis for a research project concerning New Zealand's Zero Carbon Bill. Currently, she's working at the University of Bahrain as a College Instructor.
